Beth Schafer is re-defining Jewish music by combining masterful songwriting with sensitivity to liturgy and unique insight toward text. She specializes in music for Torah-minded adults looking for an extension to their Jewish lives through music. Beth Schafer won the 2006 American Idol Underground Faith Based competition and is using her win to create new music for interfaith communities. The worship experiences that Schafer creates both at home and on the road have been dubbed everything from "exhilarating" to "incomparable." She has an innate sense of the rhythm of worship and quickly connects to a congregation's need to spiritually connect to one another and to God. When Beth leads a group in prayer, no one is a stranger.

Beth's original works have brought her into the spotlight as a featured performer/presenter at many national conferences as well as music festivals and a halftime concert at an Orlando Magic game. Beth's universal messages brought her to the stage to play for President-elect Barack Obama during his campaign in 2008. She has been called on as an educator; most recently on faculty at the URJ Scheidt Leadership seminar for temple presidents. The rest of Beth's calendar is filled with appearances as an artist-in-residence in communities across North America. Her band consists of seasoned veterans who have played with many greats from Orleans to Elton John while her shows blend healthy doses of concert, theater and inspiration.

Her 6 CDs of original music have become favorites in synagogues as well as churches and spiritual radio stations of many denominations.
