Kevin Carroll is a guitarist and a singer/songwriter. He moved from his hometown of Boise, ID, in 1991 to immerse himself in the excellent music scene of Austin, TX. He headed his own band in Austin, releasing the CD Redemption Day in 1997. The album was originally released in Italy, where it received rave reviews. Then, Freedom Records released the record in the United States, where it was equally well-received. Carroll's sound is diverse and expansive, encompassing elements of pop, soul, folk, and country within an Americana roots-rock base. Influences include Bob Dylan, Gram Parsons, the Pogues, and the Rolling Stones among others. He has most notably gained acclaim as lead guitarist for Charlie Robison. Kevin Carroll is currently preparing for the release of a new album entitled Tourmaline in early 2007 and playing acoustic shows in and around Texas either solo or with accompaniment.

"Take equal parts of George Harrison's pop-rock ethereality, the sweet side of Paul Westerberg's songwriting and the sleek classicist rock'n'roll of Tom Petty & The Heartbreakers, and you have a hint at the riches within Kevin Carroll's Tourmaline. It's a seductive tour de force that plays more and more like one of your all time favorite albums every time you spin it."
